What time stock market open robinhood

Wednesday, March 24: Robinhood filed a confidential registration statement with the US Securities and Exchange Commission, indicating its plans to go public. Thursday, March 25: Reuters reported that Robinhood is making plans to “democratize” IPOs by opening its offering and others to users at pre-market prices. Robinhood did not confirm. Robinhood is a popular trading app that offers commission-free stocks and ETFs. With its approachable interface and intuitive design, it caters to new investors looking to execute their first trades.This commission-free trading platform may be planning an IPO as soon as this month. Bloomberg reported March 3 that the online broker is preparing papers ahead of filing for a March IPO. The company reportedly filed a confidential registration statement on March 23.Some shares might be sold directly to users, the report said. On March 25, Reuters reported that Robinhood was in fact working on a new system that would let users invest not only in its IPO but in other IPOs at pre-market offering prices. Robinhood has not provided confirmation, but competitor Sofi has rolled out a similar tool. Here’s what we know and how investors can prepare for the IPO. What we know about the Robinhood IPO The popular trading app has confidentially filed a registration statement with the US Securities and Exchange Commission, reports suggest, solidifying rumors that Robinhood plans to go public. Goldman Sachs will helm the deal and the company could be worth more than $20 billion, according to Reuters.In its September 2020 funding round, Robinhood raised $460 million and was valued at $11.7 billion. The Bloomberg report suggested the value could go much higher, up to $30 billion. We’ll continue to track this story and update this page with information as it becomes available.
